Rocky Lane in BUFFALO BRANDERS!

THE RENEGADES HAD A MIGHTY TRICKY SCHEME FOR GETTING PLUMB RICH AT THE EXPENSE OF THE INDIANS—UNTIL ROCKY LANE REACHES INTO HIS OWN BAG OF TRICKS TO MATCH BULLETS AND WITS IN A SWASHING SHOWDOWN WITH THE BUFFALO BRANDERS!

ROCKY LANE, INDOMITABLE SECRET MARSHAL, WATCHES A BAND OF INDIANS ON A BUFFALO HUNT.

LOOK AT THOSE BAWNS! THEY SURE CAN HUNT BUFFALO!

WHILE FROM A DISTANT BLUFF, ROWDY RAWLINS AND HIS GANG OF RENEGADES HIDE.

LOOK AT THOSE INDIANS HUNT DOWN BUFFALO, BOSS! WITHOUT BUFFALO, THE REDSKINS WOULDN'T BE ABLE TO LIVE!

THAT'S PLUMB CORRECT! THE BUFFALO IS THE STAFF O' LIFE TO THE INJUN, WHICH GIVES ME A MIGHTY BIG IDEA!

JUST THIS! I AM TO MAKE THE REDSKINS PAY FOR THEIR BUFFALO, IF THEY WANT THEM. INSTEAD OF HUNTING THE CRITTERS FOR NOTHIN' AS THEY'RE DOIN' NOW! LISTEN; IT'S PLUMB SIMPLE!

SIX-GUN HEROES

LEGALLY, ANYTHING WITHOUT A BRAND IS A MAREKICK--INCLUDING THE BUFFALO! WELL SLAP OUR BRAND ON THEM AND THEY'LL BECOME OUR PROPERTY, SAVVY? IF THE INJUNS WANT BUFFALO, THEY'LL BUY 'EM ... FROM US!

THAT'S A MIGHTY SLICK IDEA, BOSS, BUT THERE'S ONE RUB: WHEN THE INDIANS SIGNED THEIR TREATY, THEY STICK TO THEIR GUNS ON ONE THING--THEIR RIGHT TO HUNT BUFFALO!

AND THAT TREATY IS IN THE COUNTY COURTHOUSE, RIGHT?

BECAUSE THAT'S WHERE WE'RE HEADING NOW--TO GET OUR HANDS ON THET TREATY! FOLLOW ME! I RECKON WE'LL GET TO TOWN JUST AFTER DARK!

YEAH, THEY MUST HAVE PUT IT IN AFTER IT WAS SIGNED WHICH MAKES IT PERFECT FOR US! HA, HA!

WITH PLEASURE, BOSS!

THIS IS A MIGHTY SUCK SWINOLE, BOSS, BUT IT HAS ONE WEAK POINT: HOW WILL THE INDIANS PAY FOR THE BUFFALO IF THEY DON'T HAVE ANY WAMPUM?

CAPTIVE HERD

OVER THE SUN-PARCHED prairie, Red Roan galloped—alone!

That very morning, he had been the leader of a herd of fifty wild horses. Fifty shaggy-coated mares and spindly-legged colts that had followed him unquestioningly and to whom he was king!

Then a band of hard-riding cowboys had surprised the herd in a sudden ambush. Lariats swishing through the air, they had rounded up all of the animals, driving them into an improvised corral. Only Red Roan had managed to escape, fleeing with great strides to the safety of the nearby hills. There he galloped by himself, long scarlet mane floating in the breeze.

When the first panic passed, Red Roan turned again toward the prairie. Slowly, he trotted down toward the plain, keen dark eyes searching for his herd.

At last he saw a cloud of dust, miles away on the range. It was the captive herd. Already the cowboys were driving them away, taking them from their wild, free existence, to a life of drudgery and pain.

Red Roan's hooves pounded, as he raced over the range toward the distant dust cloud.

Soon he was close enough to see his herd, moving close-packed along a broad trail. But, riding on all sides of the wild horses were sharp-eyed cowboys, their sinewy hands gripping lariats. If Red Roan were to come any closer, he would risk capture himself!

"It is better to wait . . . to follow at a distance . . ." the stallion's thoughts ran. "Perhaps there will come a chance . . ."

But all through the afternoon Red Roan followed the herd without an opportunity presenting itself . . . a chance for him to attempt to free the other wild horses. At one point the cowboys herded their captives across a broad, shallow stream. But so closely did they guard them that Red Roan was unable to do more than follow at a distance.

Night came, and the cowboys built a camp. Throughout the dark, still hours, Red Roan cropped grass near their twinkling fires. He did not rest.

When dawn came and the herd started off again, the roan stallion took up the slow pursuit, half a mile behind. He had the impulse to dash in suddenly, attempting to stampede and scatter the herd. But the risk would be too great, reason told him. If he were captured, surely none of the others would escape.

As the sun rose higher and higher, the herd continued to trot along the plain. But now the air became strangely still. A great mass of dark clouds formed menacingly in the skies. All wind ceased, save for a vagrant breeze that turned up the undersides of the cottonwood leaves. Darker and darker it grew, as the anxious cowboys scanned the sky.

"THAR'S a storm blowin' up!" one of them shouted. "An' it looks like a sidewinder! Better pull up the herd an' make camp!"

There was a distant, ominous rumble of thunder.

"Hurry!" the cowboy shouted again. "Git 'em all together, afore they git pancked an' try to run for it!"

Quickly, the cowboys rode among the wild horses, driving them together, trying to soothe them with their voices. But then the first drops began to fall—great, spattering drops that heralded a mighty storm. The rain began to come down in earnest, lashing the prairie grass, and beating heavily against the backs of the trembling mares and colts.

Unheeding, Red Roan came closer, watching the nervous herd. There was a chance . . .

"CCC-RR-AAA-CC-KK!"

WITH an ear-splitting concussion, a tremendous rumble of thunder shook the earth. Split seconds later, the heavens seemed to explode, as a glaring streak of lightning appeared. The colts whinnied in terror, and sought shelter against their mothers' sides. But again the thunder rumbled, and now the rain poured down, more heavily than ever.

It was all the cowboys could do to keep their own mounts under control. Between the lashing rain, and the sheer fury of the elements, all nature seemed to have gone berserk.

Seeing this, Red Roan determined to take his chance.

Raising his great head, ears pricked forward, he whinnied once, loud and clear. The sound pierced even the noise of the tempest. Every mare heard it and recognized it as the voice of her master. Again he whinnied louder, and then, galvanized into action, he galloped toward the herd.

In a moment, he was among them, hooves beating the ground, a brilliant gleam of color in the darkness of the storm. His shrill cry was a challenge, and an order! "Follow me to safety!"

Scarcely had he sped through the herd, than every wild horse had obeyed his imperious command. Swiftly they scattered, evading the cowboys who were riding herd on them. Then, seeing Red Roan racing away from them toward the hills, they followed him. While the bewildered cowboys tried desperately to quirt their terrified, panicky horses to the pursuit, Red Roan gathered his herd behind him.

The suddenness of his move caught the cowboys by surprise. It was a full three minutes before they could take up the chase in the terrible downpour.

In that three minutes, the crimson stallion had led his fleeing herd to the edge of the broad stream he had crossed but a short time before. Now it was a deeper, more turbulent river, its waters fed by the mighty rain. Red Roan hesitated for a moment. But he knew that the cowboys would be coming up swiftly behind the herd. There was no time to waste.

He whinnied once, and plunged into the water.

At his example, the herd followed him, slipping down the steep, clay-banked edges of the river, fighting their way against the current. The waves beat at them, catching them and twisting them about helplessly. But still they fought on, the urge to freedom great within their hearts. Now Red Roan was halfway across and the herd was close behind him!

At every moment, the waves were growing more powerful, and the waters deeper.

But there was no cowardice, no hanging back. When a colt disappeared under the surface, momentarily beaten by the force of the current, an older horse helped him, thrust him on. Legs flailing, nostrils fighting for breath, heads straining, the wild horses battled their way toward the opposite shore.

One by one, they reached it. Chests heaving with the mighty effort, they scrambled up the bank to where Red Roan was waiting for them. One by one they came, until all had crossed the river safely.

Without a moment's pause, the red stallion wheeled about and led his herd away from the river toward the mountains that were much closer now. But in heart Red Roan was worried. He knew that the cowboys had taken up the pursuit, that even now they must be galloping after the herd. Was escape possible?

THE ANSWER lay in the fury of the gale, in the water that was cascading down from the skies. For when the first cowboy reached the river, the torrent had swelled to such an extent that it was completely impassable. It would have been suicide to attempt to cross it.

The cowboy rested in his saddle, hunching his shoulders against the furious rain. He peered through the slanting drops, saw the distant horses trotting up toward the hills. There was no one there to hear him, but he spoke away.

"Good luck, Red," he said. "This time, you earned the right to keep 'em. Good luck!"

A New Hobby Gives You A Brand New Interest!

Yes, anyone from 5 to 80 can draw or sketch or paint anything now—the very first time you use the "Magic Art Reproducer" like a professional artist—no matter how "nuggets" you think you are! An unlimited variety and amount of drawings can be made. Art is admired and respected by everyone. Most hobbies are expensive, but drawing costs very little just some inexpensive paper, pencils, crayons, paint. No costly equipment needed to start out. You can copy anything. It automatically reproduces anything you want to draw on one sheet of paper. Then easily and quickly follow the lines of the "picture image" with your pencil...and you have an accurate original drawing that anyone would think an artist had done. No guesswork, no judging sizes and shapes! Reproduces black and white and actual colors for paintings...and makes drawing larger or smaller as you wish.

Anyone can use it on any desk, table, board, etc.—indoor or outdoors! Light and compact, it can be taken anywhere you go. No other hobby or pastime is easier, faster, "fancier"! You'll be proud to frame your original drawings for a most distinctive touch to your home. Give them to friends as gifts that are "different," appreciated.

How fast it produces! Everyone will ask you to draw them. You'll be surprised at the number of people you can draw well without the "Magic Art Reproducer," because you have developed a "sense" and "feeling" artists have—which may lead to a good paying art career.
